Lime Village Territory

They say our ancestors were from what they call the K'qizaghetnu. They spoke of Qeghenilen. They all would hunt and they would go out as far as Swift River. In the winter the old people would hunt sheep. In the fall time they would fish at Vendash Vena, Nizdlu Vena, and Qek'dichen Vena. In the Alaska Range and at Swift River they would hunt squirrels in the fall. In midsummer there at Qeghenilen, they would put up fish. Our ancestors would hunt brown bear and black bear using a spear or bow and arrow.

Passes to Cook Inlet

My father and my grandfather used to go to the seashore to hunt. They would hunt seals and sea otters, they say. They would walk through Chickalusion Pass to Kustatan. They would walk through Telaquana Lake Pass to Tyonek. They could also go to Tyonek through Twin Lakes (Merrill) Pass. The upper Stony River Pass also went to Tyonek.

Birch Bark Boat

They went around to find good birch bark for making a birch bark canoe. They split a straight spruce. Then they made a frame. Next they made a center beam. Then they made the ribs and they lashed them up. After that they covered it with skins and caulked it with pitch. Then they put it in the water. They would hunt in it.

Sheep Hunting

After fishing, they would move up to Venteh Dek'enluhi (lakes at the head of Swift River). They would set twenty snares. Those sheep would come down. When they went into the snares, no one would watch. Maybe some would get snared when they went into the snares. When they were all snared, our grandfather would look. Then he would camp overnight. Early in the morning, they would go go over there. Then he would take them out of the snare loops and they would drag them down. They skinned them and packed them back.

Hunting Mountain Squirrel

They killed seagulls. Then they split seagull wing feathers. They used split seagull wing feathers to make mountain squirrel snares. In the fall, we went up to the Alaska Range. We gathered willows for snare toggle sticks and set the snares. Then we spent the night and checked them again. We killed mountain squirrel. They are so fat and the skin is so useful!

The First Americans

When our father was a child, the first Americans left from Iliamna. And they had eight horses packing their food. They passed through here and went down river and arrived at the Kuskokwim. And there they portaged over to the Yukon. From there they somehow got back to their village. Two of them stayed there with the people. They kept their horses. Those were the first Americans to pass through here.

Wormwood They gather wormwood and they cook it some. When one has blood poisoning, he sometimes sticks his hand in the warm water. Sometimes they put it on as a hot pack. Also, they make a nice wormwood steambath switch.

Pete Bobby

Blackberry Tea They cook that blackberry tea and they drink it. It is used by those who are constipated or those with a stomach ache. They drink only that.

Pete Bobby

Red Currants They peel the red currant bark and they cook it. Then they cool it off. They drink it for tuberculosis.

Vonga Bobby

Red Moss If an injured person began to swell up, they would gather red moss. They heated rocks and they put that moss on them. The moss got warm and they put it on the person who was hurt. He'd get healed up quickly from it.

Nora Alexie

Red Alder They peeled off the red alder bark. Then they scrapped it with a knife. Next they poured water on it. Then they smeared it on the skin. It dried up and turned a red color. With this on the skin, it wouldn't dry out.
